

I think that the privacy on the phone service is up to the individual who has the phone and not have to pay extra for their privacy. I personally do not want to be bothered by anyone trying to sell me anything. If I wanted the product I would have gone out and tried to find the product at my own leisure. Most of the time when someone is selling something over the phone they do not know how to take "NO" for an answer. If you don't like being told that you can't bother people over the phone find a different job. So I would like the FCC to keep the Telephone Privacy Law in effect.
